The Heart of the Irish . . .

The center of every great organization is the people in it. The people, with their ability and ambition to work together in friendship, bring about the progress or the downfall of every enterprise entered upon by the group as a whole. They are creatures capable of so transcending their own limitations as to gain more knowledge about their world and themselves in that world.

The life of the people has a beat unique to the institution. Each individual, by participating in the organizations of the school, helps keep the Irish heart beating and thriving.

Shown throughout this book will be the different moods of the people who make up this school's heart. The people in classrooms, in the office, in the seemingly never ending lunch line, the students, faculty, and employees of the school, will be pictured as they were during the school term 1967-1968.

. . . Is Its People . . .

Active in Many Fields

. . And Prepared to Lead . . .

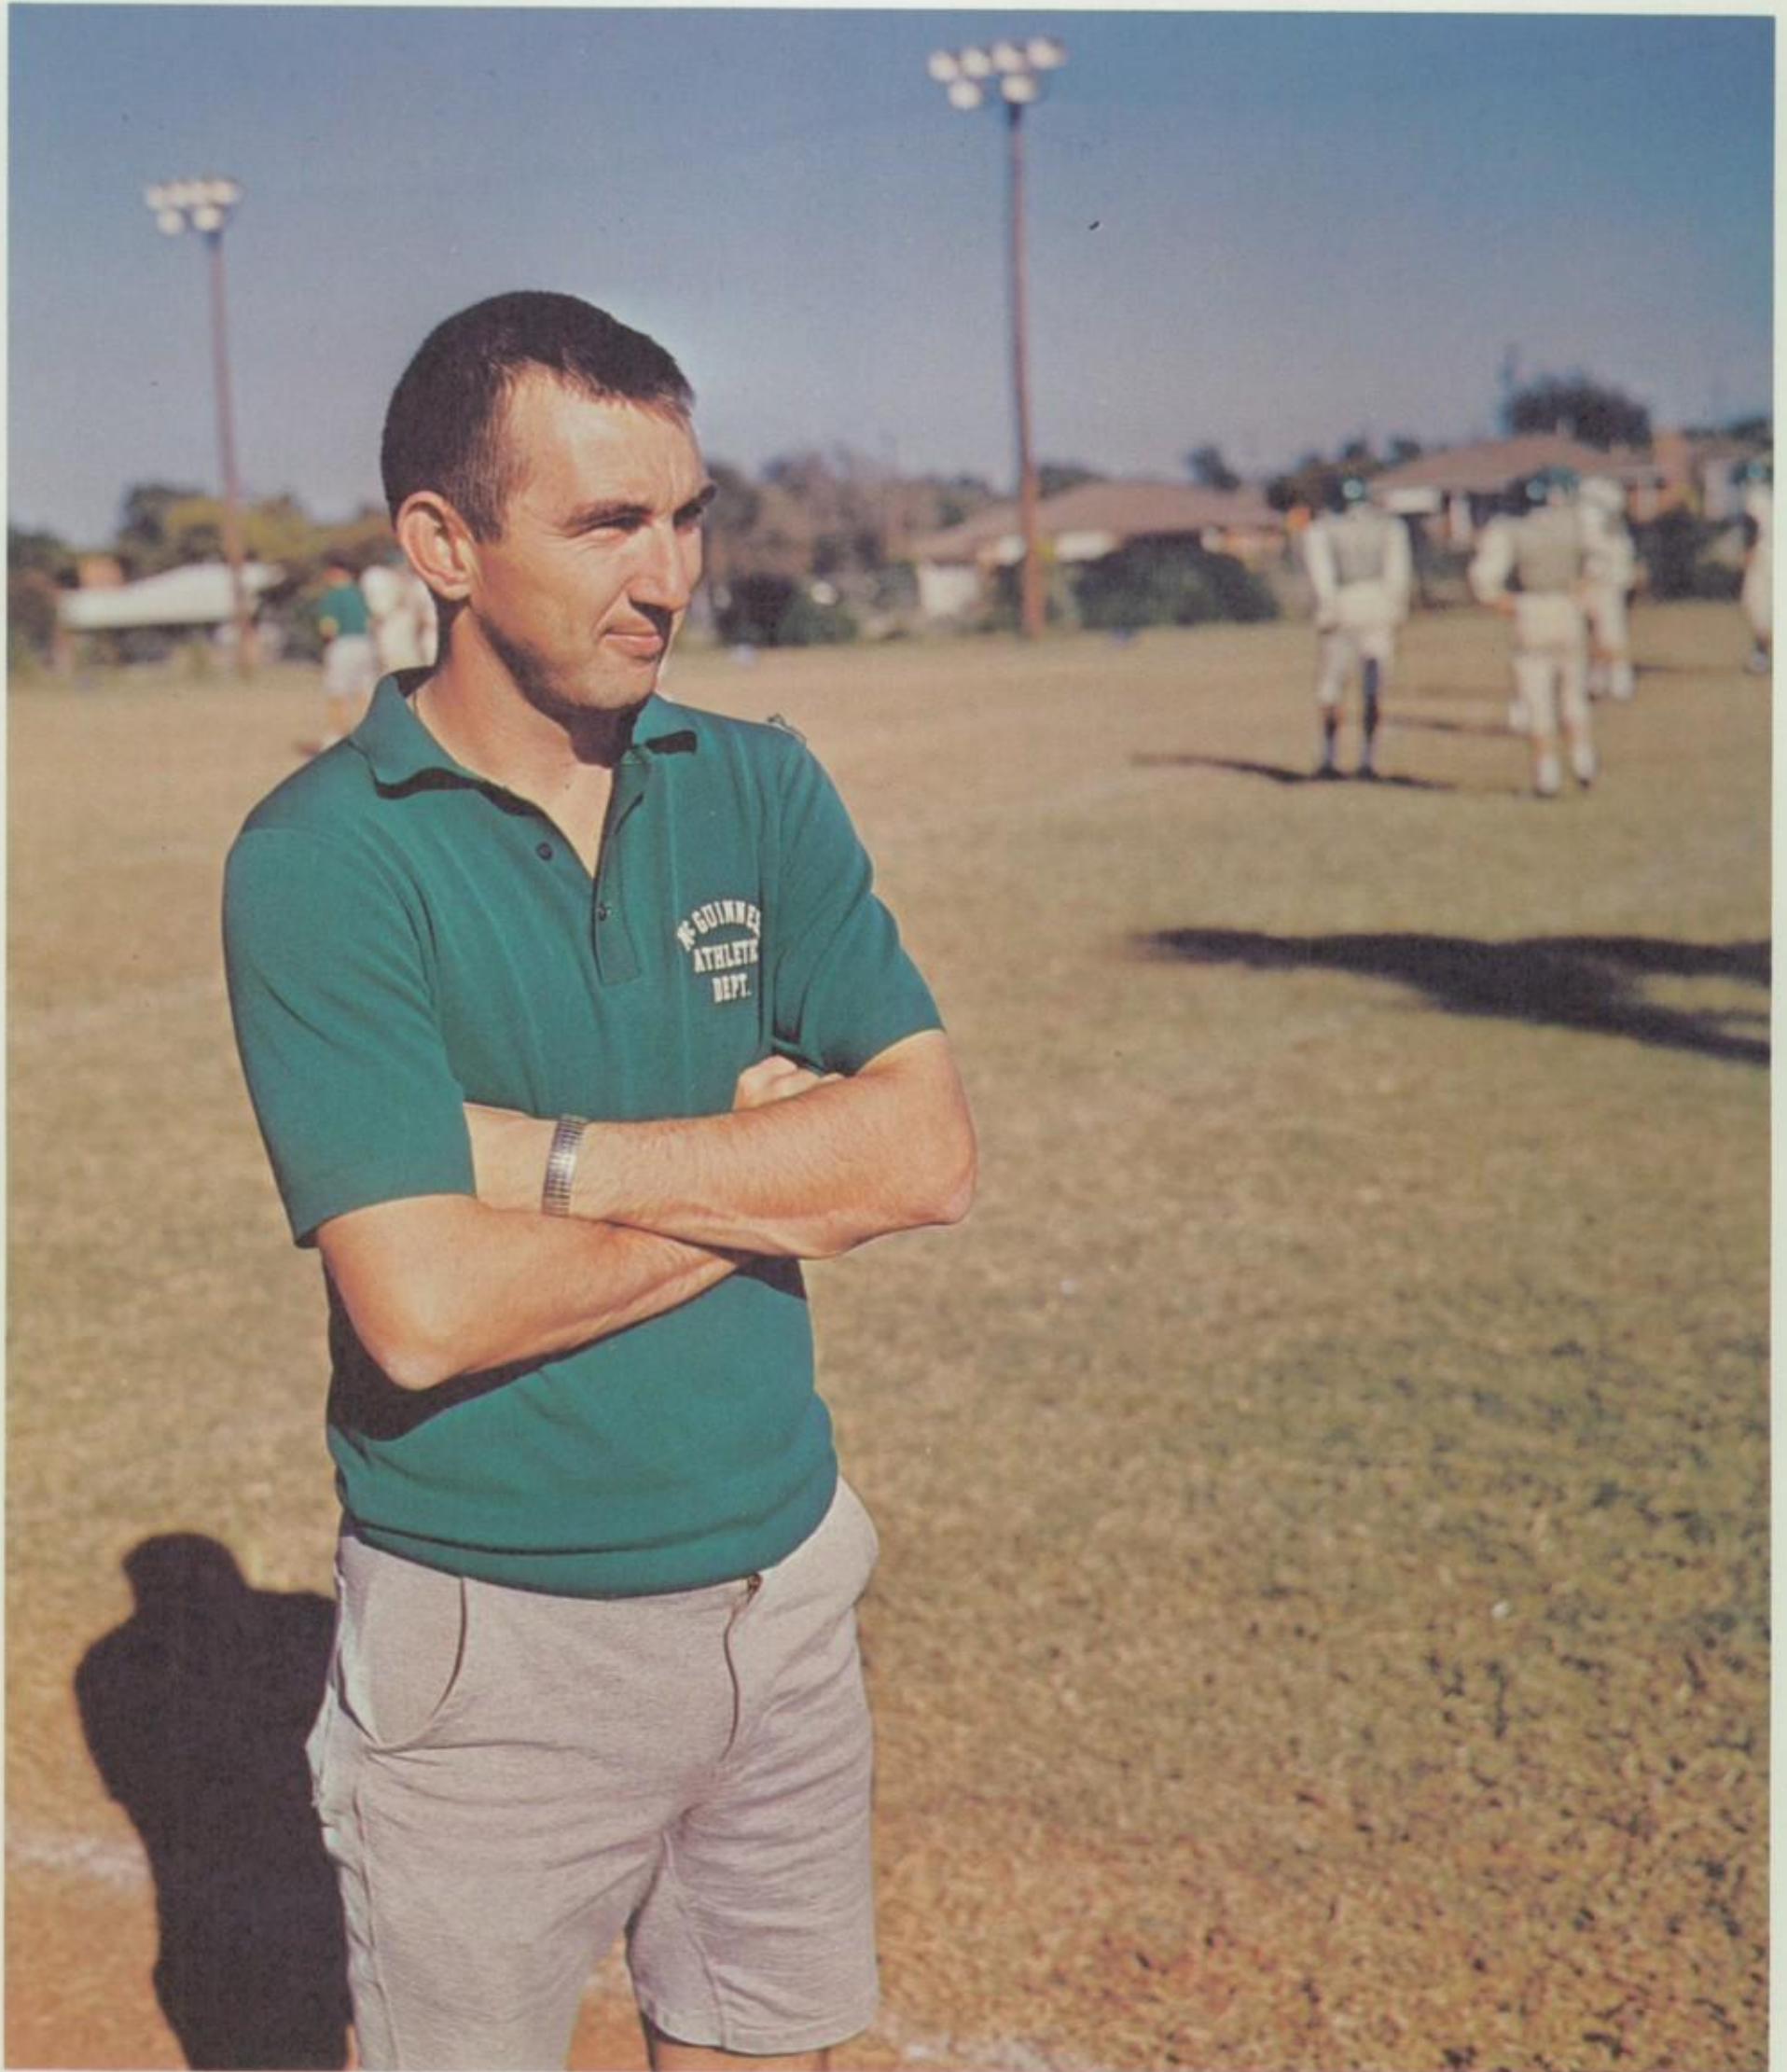

. . . A Demanding M.H.S. Population.

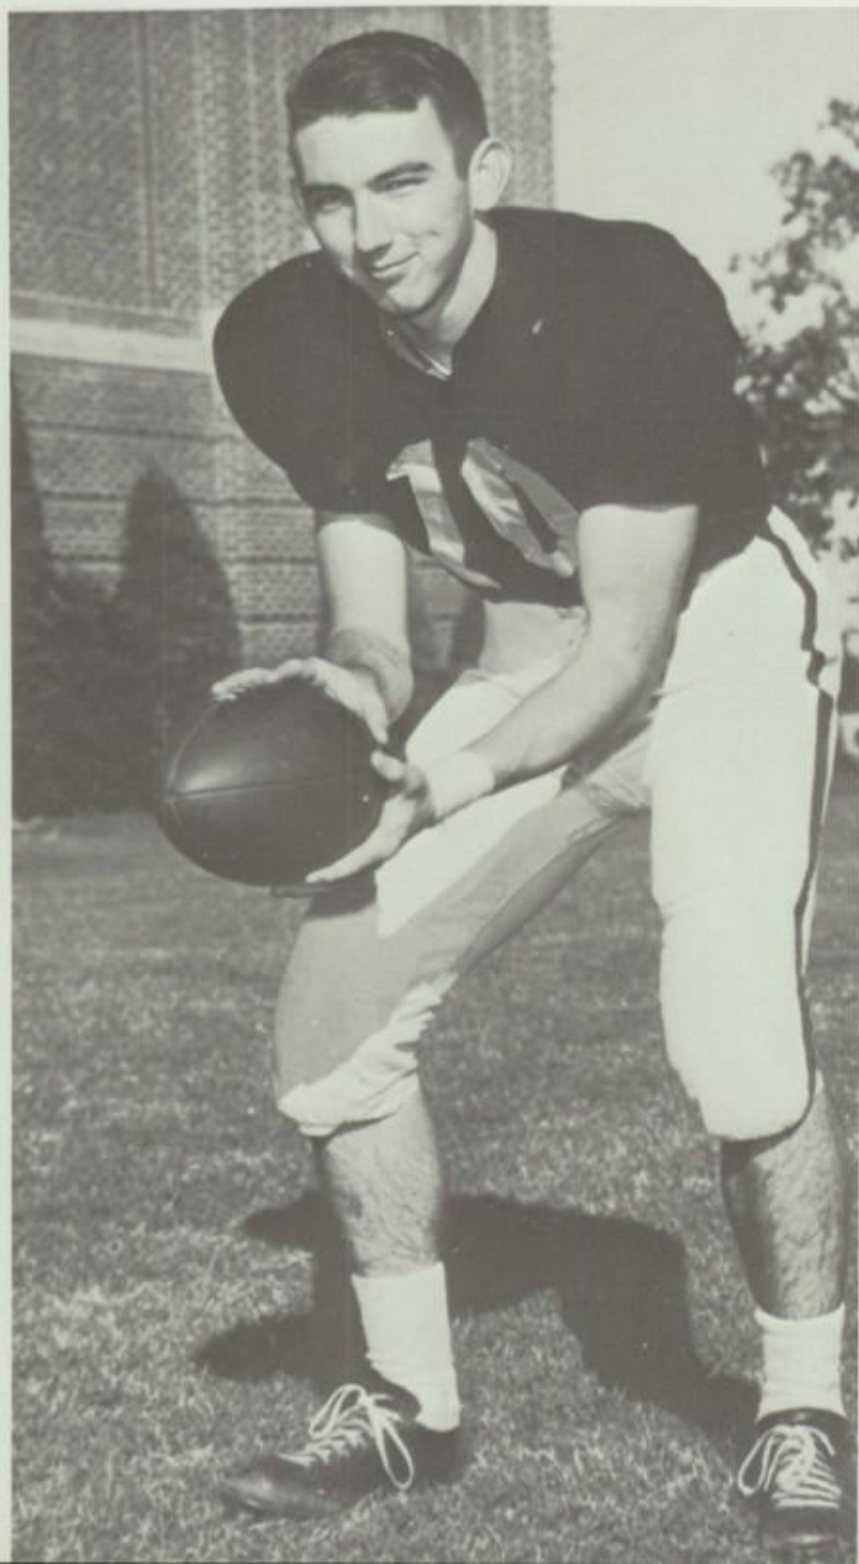

A TRIBUTE TO COACH HUGHES

Supporting every building there is some type of foundation. Many times this is hidden, yet if taken away the building would crumble. This can be applied to a school—OUR school—McGuinness. For behind the scene serving as our foundation are many devoted men and women.

We wish to dedicate the 1968 Chi Rho to one of our pillars of strength, Mr. Frank Hughes, known to all for his great coaching ability and true Irish Spirit. As all devoted people must do, Coach Hughes has learned to center his entire life around McGuinness. He has led a life to be proud of and the yearbook staff wishes him the best of luck in all his future endeavors.

A most important part of this school is its faculty. If not for them, we would not be able to function in the traditional manner of a school. Although some people predict that teachers will soon be replaced by teaching machines such as closed circuit television and computers, the students at MHS can testify to the fact that nothing can replace the warmth, friendliness, and genuine concern for student problems which is radiated from every member of the faculty. Because these members of another generation are so important to us, we, the students, are in a sense dedicating this section to our faculty, another segment of the heart of the Irish.

TIME

by Mary Lawrence, sophomore

A minute gone;
And then a day.
A week has passed
to become a year.

Time
travels
quickly;

But where?

Does it soar
to the heavens?

Or sink
to hell?

Or does it drift
somewhere in between?

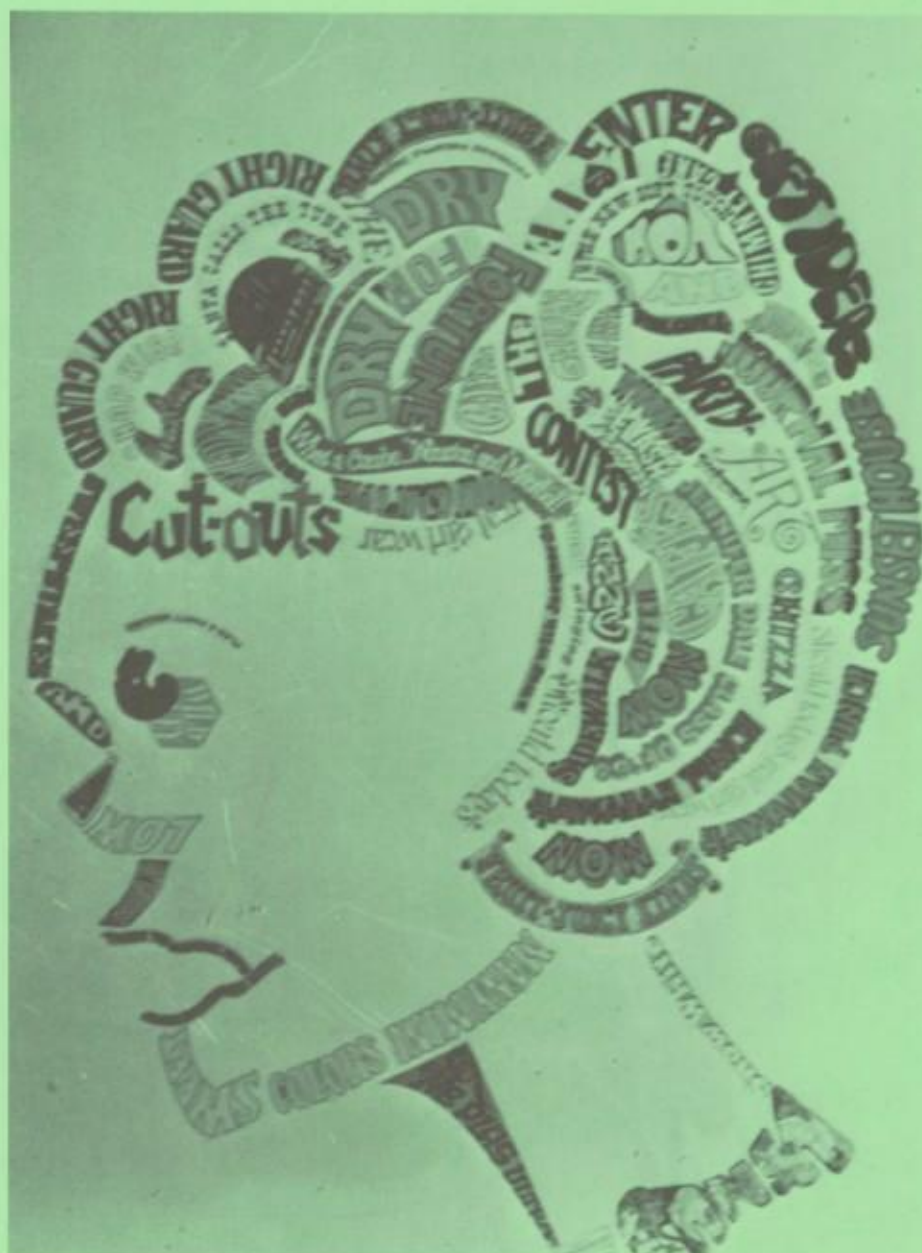

Perhaps it's nowhere;
a nothingness.

Does it live?
Or does it die?

Who has the answer?
Who's to say?

With every second passed
there is a moment lost.

Or perhaps;
a memory gained.

RAINY DAYS

by Karen Cutter, senior

Rainy days are deplored by most people, but I find them quite fascinating. It's entrancing to watch a raindrop rivering down a window pane, picking up a friend here and another there and always leaving the path of its existence behind. Witnessing a race between two drops to see which one will reach the window sill first is exciting to me. I love to see the waterwings which flap up when a car glides through a puddle.

There is something luxuriously lazy about a rainy day. They are the best days for sleeping late in the mornings. Only a rainy day has the power to slow down our fast-paced lives.

At night, the majestic mystery of a storm is revealed in the winks of lightning that flirt in the black sky. Sometimes the entire sky lights up in a moment of psuedo-sunlight.

Rain may ruin a week-end trip, or postpone a football game, but I can't think of a better day for taking it easy and noticing the little things in life.

EVEN MEMBERS HAVE NO INFLUENCE ON THIS COURSE

by Mike Houpe, senior

Opening day, cloudless and calm, was perfect. The fairway, green, smooth and so inviting was wall to wall and the cup at the far end beckoned me. Pressing the remote control button, I turned on the flag, the 21 inch screen above the cup.

The rough, a potted tree, uprooted window box, a sofa and two lamps on one side and the piano and a bordering kitchen partition on the other side did not look too formidable. The dogleg formed by an extended corner of the cocktail table appeared to be negotiable, though dangerous because of the overdue payment on my household insurance. Two bunkers, (crumpled overcoats from the hall closet), a sandtrap's salt scattered on a tray, and a water hazard of a half-full dishpan from the sink completed this interesting hole.

I'm a bit rusty; probably'll get a bogey four, I thought, as I set myself over the ball.

Just then the rough parted on the right as the swinging door opened and my brother walked into view from the neighboring fairway.

Fore! I yelled.

Disregarding me, he picked up the cup and went back into the kitchen.

At the same moment, someone tapped me on the shoulder and a voice asked plaintively, May I please play through? I'm in an awful hurry.

Automatically I nodded my head.

Thank you.

My mother proceeded by me onto the fairway, restored the bunkers to their proper hangers, straightened the dogleg, and started to smooth out the rough.

Hey, lady! I roared. What do you think you're doing? You don't own the course, you know!

She nodded agreeably.

True, she said, and handed me a card.

It read:

This course is officially closed for extensive repairs. Will re-open in April at a much finer location.

Coyle's Law

by Kyle Johnson, junior

My name is Philip Coyle. Now, don't drop this in disgust. I realize that you know me only as an insignificant person, always getting on someone's nerves. That's the trouble, though. You see, you know me wrong!

Last month I drew a little gadget during English class. It was just a casual thing, of course. Some people draw cars, some draw people; I draw original little gadgets.

But to continue, I showed this gadget, (which I call Coyle's Perpetual Appliance), to some of my friends. They smiled, of course. They're great friends, always amused at whatever I do. In particular, I showed it to Henry Randall. Outwardly, Henry's not at all like me. While he's big, popular and easy-going, I am small, not especially popular, and inclined to be over-serious. Still, we're great friends.

When Henry saw my little drawing, he laughed, of course. Then he passed it around the little group that is always with him. "Look at this," he said. "Have you ever seen anything as crazy as this?"

I could hear the barely concealed admiration in his voice. This admiration became more apparent as he took the paper and said, with an odd smile on his face, "Let me keep this for awhile. I know someone who would like to see it."

The next weeks passed normally, except that it seemed that more people grinned when they passed me in the hall. They had probably heard about my drawing from Henry. Imagine! I was becoming well-known because of my silly little drawing!

Yesterday I got a letter from some obscure little research company I'd never heard of. In handwriting somehow familiar to me it said:

"Dear Mr. Coyle:

We have received your drawing of the Coyle Perpetual Appliance. I admit that we have had considerable difficulty in understanding the function of this device, but we feel that we have found some interesting potentials in it.

However, the theoretical basis of the C.P.A. is far more interesting. In our extensive research we have found that it operates on a hitherto unknown law of nature, which we have named Coyle's Law in your honor.

This law states that attraction and repulsion between bodies are relative to the bodies. In other words, from the viewpoint of one body, another body might seem to be attracted to it, while from the viewpoint of the other body a repulsion might exist between the two. Or, to use a human example, some half-wits actually think they have friends when nothing could be further from the truth!

We congratulate you on your discovery, and hope that you will await further word from us.

Very truly yours,
Randal Henries
Psuedo Research, Inc."

Of course I am very proud of this letter, but for some reason whenever I show it to my friends they only laugh. Why won't they let me in on the joke?

ESSAY ON FIGURE

OFFICIAL COMMUNIQUE

OFFICE of FIELD OPERATIONS—CENTRAL INTELLIGENCE AGENCY—WASH. DC.

Attention: This is a matter of the utmost urgency!

The next forty-eight hours will be crucial to the survival of the United States. As most of you know, there is at this moment an imminent threat of nuclear attack from Tibet. The mad-man dictator of this aggressive country, Premier Chalie Cho Mein, has warned that he will unleash his I.C.B.M. force upon the U.S. within two days.

Normally, there would be no danger since all Americans could retire to the nearest fallout shelter, and thus be safe from harm. We have discovered, however, that none of the available shelters have signs pointing them out due to an oversight by official federal sign painter, Sherwin P. Williams III. For this reason we have gathered you people, the members of the Painter's Union, local #479, to help get these signs painted and placed around the country. Now, on to the instructions.

Begin on your paper by drawing a square, about four inches by four inches. Once this is complete, sketch a circle in the center of the square, making it about two inches in diameter. If you have successfully mastered that much, draw a triangle within the circle. The triangle should touch the outside rim of the circle only on the three points of the triangle and one of the points of the triangle should be pointing upwards. Now, draw on the right side of the triangle a line, starting about half way up the side of the triangle. This line should be parallel to the right side of the square and extend upwards about an inch. On top of this line draw a circle of about one fourth inch in diameter. Next draw a rectangle. It should fit with one of the smaller ends on the base line of the triangle. The small end should be about half an inch long, and the rectangle should extend up into the triangle about one inch. Now, in the rectangle draw a small circle in the middle and towards the top of the rectangle. It should fit within the rectangle. The last detail to be put in is a period. This should be located to the left of the small circle in rectangle and below the circle by about an eighth of an inch.

You thirty people have got about 2,300 of those signs to crank out in the next twelve hours, so get started. Just keep in mind that you are helping your country through a grave crisis. After this is over, I am authorized to tell you that you will each receive from the President himself a gold fountain pen with his initials on it and a free pass to the next public barbecue. Good luck, and get busy.

LIFE AS A FRESHMAN AT McGUINNESS

by Cindy Clayton, freshman

New teachers, agonizing exams, seemingly thousands of faces in the halls, victorious football games, and tumultuous Pep Rallies are all part of being a freshman at McGuinness. The adjustment is slow, and nearly everyday something different happens which shows even more the contrasts between grade school and high school.

The first frenzied day is always the worst. We hunt desperately for our own classes, only to laugh when a tall boy enters the classroom three minutes late, and handing the teacher a small slip, admits sheepishly, "I got lost."

Being a "frosh" brings complaints that "they" (the upperclassmen) blame everything on us. After the first Pep assembly, moans and whines could be heard from departing ninth graders. "Well, they could have TOLD us when to do the Class Victory Cheer!"

On the more serious side, Student Council gives us a feeling of responsibility, and our first chance to have a voice in the way our school is run. The Olympics help us to develop a competitive spirit, and the many clubs and organizations assist us in increasing our knowledge.

Surely every upperclassman must have, at one time or another, felt the despair and embarrassment when a tray-full of assorted plates and glasses went crashing to the floor. Amid shouts of "Yea, Freshman!", he wishes the floor would open and swallow him up, while the cafeteria echoes with thunderous applause.

Despite all the difficulties that must be overcome, the freshman year is a most exciting and refreshing one, and to spend it at McGuinness is twice as enjoyable.

These optical illusions were created by Sharon Lynch, Celeste Reinauer, and Andy Archbald.

Advanced art students Gail Linnemann, Debbie Harris and Arlene Richardson begin the trials and tribulations of working on a mural.

Wouldn't Dream of It

SADIE HAWKINS DAY DANCE
Sat. Apr. 15 7:30-12:00 P.M.
GIRL ASK BOY

THE NOTICE was of no surprise to Camela, but the last three words glared out at her from the poster. The Sadie Hawkins Day Dance, the second biggest event of the year, was a must on every student's social calendar. EVERYBODY went—everybody except Camela. She was a senior now, but up to this time had dated very little, and never a boy she really liked. Never, ever, in her four years at Appomattox High had she gone to this Dogpatch-inspired event.

SHE TURNED to walk down the hall and just missed colliding with Sheila Ketchum, who smiled vaguely and mumbled an automatic, "Excuse me, honey." Camela watched her hurry on to the parking lot door, all the while shouting greetings, joking, flirting—doing all the things expected of a cheerleader and former homecoming queen. Sheila was one of the "in" group whom Camela privately called the "beautiful people" of Appomattox. But she didn't scorn or despise them; on the contrary, she admired and envied them, and wished with all her heart that she was one of them. She was always dreaming that she was surrounded by a "passel" of boys fighting for a dance or an evening with her. And she, Camela, would blithely favor some and break the hearts of others. But Camela the Dream was far, far removed from Camela the Reality. She left every ounce of confidence behind in her dream world and emerged shy, unassuming, indistinct.

BUT THIS TIME things were going to be different. She had made up her mind to free herself from her fantasies and break into the select group of "beautiful people". She would do it by Dogpatching the most "beautiful" boy in the whole school, Bret Shadell.

EVERY CHEMISTRY CLASS that was ever taught by Mr. Dwyer was seated in alphabetical order. So every day this year Camela had sat behind Bret. Thank goodness it was behind, instead of in front, because she would never have turned around and talked to him. He would almost always say "hi" or ask her how she did on a test. Sometimes he teasingly expressed amazement at her ability to catch on to "this screwy chemistry". Camela had dwelled on these little exchanges until she had blown them up to a full-fledged romance. "Yes," she thought, "he must like me! Why else would he talk to me so much? Maybe it isn't very personal stuff and so what if he hasn't asked me out; he's just shy under all the popularity that's been pushed on him. He's just waiting for me to make the first move."

THAT NIGHT she waited until the whole family was occupied elsewhere and there would be no one to ask whom she was calling or why. For extra privacy she took the phone into the bathroom and locked the door. She sat down on the floor, and taking a deep breath, dialed his number.

RING ... RING ... RING ... Oh Lordy, make him be home! Ring ... "Hi! Bret here." Camela opened her mouth but every smooth, clever thing she had planned to say had exited her brain at the sound of his voice.

"Hello? Is anybody there?"

"Y-yes! Oh, Bret! I guess that's who you said it was. Well, this is Camela Snider."

"Cam-? Oh, hi Camela. How's the ol' chemistry coming along? Gonna wipe us all out on the quiz tomorrow? Well, what d'ya need from a flunkie like me?"

"I ... uh ... I didn't call about school. I mean, it sorta has do with school. See, I wanted to know ... if you're not busy or something ... well, if you'd like to go to the Sadie Hawkins Day Dance with me."

A moment of dead silence, then ... "Uh, well, sure! Sounds like a lot of fun. When is it anyway?"

"Saturday, the fifteenth."

"April fifteenth? You're kidding. Of all the times to have it! Gosh, my parents have got the idea in their heads to go visit my cousins that weekend! They live clear down in San Antonio and we only see 'em once a year. You know how parents are about visiting relatives. 'Im awful sorry. If it was only another weekend, any one but the fifteenth. But gee, it's early enough that you can get another date. I'm awful sorry."

"That's okay. Leah, I know how it is. Yeah, I'm sorry you couldn't go, too. I'll see you around. Bye."

THE PHONE fell heavily into the cradle and Camela leaned back with a sigh against the bath tub. He wasn't going to San Antonio. He wouldn't accept any other date to the dance now, but he wasn't going to San Antonio. Plenty of time to get another date ... ha! She wouldn't dream of chancing another refusal. All Camela felt now was an emptiness, like someone had socked her in the stomach and it hurt. No, she wouldn't dream ...

WHY HIPPIES?

by Ann Kennedy, sophomore

This summer I visited my grandparents in Hillsborough, a wealthy residential section on the outskirts of San Francisco. While there, I went and saw Haight-Ashbury. My first impression was that of absolute joy. The "flower children" were so open and friendly, I immediately made plans for running away. What stopped me? I don't know; perhaps it was the fact that everything was so dirty. In any event, I grew interested in everything concerning Hippies, both pro and con. I saw the T.V. specials and read articles about them, and have since come to the conclusion that Hippies are simply mixed-up kids. They go to places like Haight-Ashbury and Greenwich Village because these places are different, and it's easier to hide from the responsibility of growing up there.

I think these people are wrong, and I feel sorry for them. I cannot see what they hope to gain by running away from life instead of facing it. I believe in the value of looking life smack in the face and going on and living it.

Yes, it is fun to dress and act like a Hippie; it is fun to be bold and appall adults; but life isn't all fun—it is some responsibility. The Hippies are evidence that many fail to face up to that fact.

A TRICK

by Ricki Ryland,
freshman

How was I to know that I would never see him again?
I knew him such a short time
in the dark chasm of eternity . . .
Why, it was just a short while ago
he shouted "So long!" and ran off,
His shirt tail flapping in the breeze.

Now they say he's gone . . .
I remember when he would beg a pen and paper off someone
Then quickly scribble his homework . . .
When he would charge triumphantly from the classroom at the 3:15 bell . . .

No! He's not dead!
He has gone with a laugh.
He has played a trick on death!
He has run off, his shirt tail flapping
in the breeze.

BALLAD

by Mary Kierl, junior

Was Plato ever forced to write
A sonnet twenty-three?
Or Shakespeare ever told to work
On his philosophy?

Oh, no. These men did only what
To them came naturally.
So why is writing ballads made
Compulsory for me?

I'm told it's to appreciate
The work that poets do,
And I would be the last one to Admit that this weren't true.

But some of us less artistic kids
Are always filled with fear,
For we all know that teachers ask
For poems every year.

I wonder if teachers really know
The pain they put us through,
When they assign poems and songs
And ballads for us to do.

ON BEING A GREAT POET

by Micheal O'Hara, sophomore

It seems, to be a great poet
Of much recognition and fame,
You must use grandiloquent language,
And make a guessing game
Of what the theme and subject
Of your great work may be;
For in choosing the theme and subject,
The spectre, you will see,
Is wide and greatly varied.

Now the game you start to play
By making your avid readers
Find out what you're trying to say:
Never come right out and say it,
But enclose it in flowery lines
Of fourteen-word descriptions;
Make them expand their minds
To the limitless reaches of infinity
To grasp the secrets of your thoughts.

But to make it too simple and easy,
This poem, a challenge, is not.
So hear! all you talented people,
If you want a great poet to be:
Make sure that your poems make no sense at all
And you'll gain lasting infamy.

ODE TO THE FILLIES

by Risa Ryland, junior

Eighteen proud, prancing beauties,
Eighteen rearing, stamping beauties
In the fiery fog.

Crashing blindly in the blackness,
Whirling in the dark confusion,
Racing, running forward, falling . . .
The last spark dies.

Nothing left but blackened timber . . .
Empty, darkening sky.

Far away beyond all sadness,
Racing wild in joyful madness,
Dancing in the sun's reflection,
Noble Nature dwells.

FACING REALITY

by Mary Hochgraefe, junior

I never thought I'd turn one day to find you there.

A song within my heart,
once soft and undisturbed,
grew loud and joyful.

No longer could it remain within me
and so I shared.

I never thought you'd be the one to warm my heart
if only for awhile.

But these moments of sharing—
encountering mysteries,
exploring adventurous potentials—

They did so much to make us laugh and so we shared.

I never thought I'd have to see
you go,

Or let these tears unmask my being.
My yearning hand
reaches out for you—

Are you truly gone,
do we still share?

I never thought a pain could feel so strangely melancholy.

But what is joy without pain?
And what pain is not a forerunner of joy?
Only that which isn't in truth one of these . . .

But you are real, and have become a part of this reality in me.

THE BLACK DEATH

by Susan Ryan

I am alone now, here inside these damp gray walls, and since I have nothing to do and no one to talk to I will tell you my story. It's not pleasant trying to recall those weeks of misery, but what else can I do? I don't dare leave the castle and endanger the lives of the healthy, for I fear I have it now.

It was the rats that brought it, those filthy rodents! The children were first and then everyone caught. It was bad enough with the disease crawling all over the place; but God only knows why the weather seemed infected, too. Every day the gray clouds hung low over the walls, making everything hot and sticky. But now, I can't understand why the sun is shining and I can feel a cool breeze on my weak feverish body.

Every night children were crying, and dying off one by one, and the people would take them away. The food was running low and starving people would run through the streets, stealing and vandalizing and not caring. It seemed like the population of rats was multiplying. People couldn't sleep for fear of waking up and finding rats gnawing on them.

The whole situation was ghastly, but what could we do? Pray? How could God let this happen? Is there a God? When the men that took the corpses away died, the people would drop dead in the streets or in their dirty houses.

No one wanted to live anymore and sooner or later they were released. It was the only merciful thing for there was no bread or water left. No, happy laughter of children, no people singing from the wineshops, no more smell of freshly baked bread, just silence and an occasional squeak from a well-fed rat.

I'm getting very weak now and I cannot continue to write I wish I could tell you more but ...

THE ONLY UNSHELLED PEANUT

by Paula Fiegerer, freshman

Poor little peanut,
All alone.
Don't cry.
Think, little peanut, think.
Everyone changes sometime.
You have to change, too.
But don't wait forever.
Look, little peanut!
You're all alone
'Cause you don't want to change.
And you're sad, too, little peanut.
But we're happy.
Why won't you come and be happy with us?
You're afraid, little peanut.
Don't be afraid.
You think it's better not to change.
But you're wrong, little peanut, so wrong!
We're waiting for you, little peanut.
But we can't wait forever.
I wish I could make you change, but I can't.
Good-bye, little peanut, I'm leaving now.
Poor little peanut,
All alone.

A SECRET LIFE

by Ricki Ryland, freshman

A hidden castle in the setting sun, made with lovingly packed sand shaped into walls of wanted security
Inside a shell, gleams with an aurora of a secret life.

The Tide comes . . .

Footsteps hurry in the morning sun,
and the small strides halt disbelievingly,
and searching eyes are filled
With tears that must never fall,
from a secret life.

VENGEANCE REGRETTED

by Margaret Cowan, sophomore

It seemed that time could hardly alter
The overwhelming passion of fantasies untold.
Yet silence breaks the force,
For my heart lies within a storm.
No words of comfort strengthened this life-long passion stilled.
Without distress did I respond,
Absorbing only the dank bitterness of words deep-felt.
Insensible to your pleas,
I rendered neither grievance nor reluctance.
Your roving eyes had searched for mine.
Unnerved I turned . . . and heard
you go . . .
Then I faltered not, but now as the wind rushes between the trees,
The leaves fall dead.

CHANGE

by Carol Kavanaugh,

Can you change without
knowing?
Can you change without showing?
While the world changes
around you
Must it change without
you?
No man is an island—
Are you not a man?

ARE WE DOING OUR JOB?

by Fred Zin, freshman

When all is quiet and day is done,
I look out my window and see the sun.
I look at the trees in my back yard,
And see the birds they shade and guard.
Though these things are simple things,
Not many people think of them.
No, they are too busy making wars—
shooting and killing and making bars for those who have done wrong.
They are too busy making rockets—wiring and making sockets
to send a man to the moon.
Don't we have enough trouble here on earth
Than to be blasting men into the Universe?

Richard Mize and Cecilia Grace

The 1968 Senior Class Favorites are Richard Mize and Cecilia Grace.

Richie was a transfer from St. Francis Seminary his Junior year. During his four years, he has participated in tennis, baseball, and basketball. Besides being senior class president, he has also been a Youth Citizenship representative, Student Council representative, a member of the Letterman's Club, gone to Boy's State, and received the Spanish III award.

Cecilia has been a four year member of the Pep Club and is now serving as secretary of her Senior class. She is a very active member of Queen's Players and Tyros and has held supporting roles in such plays as "Majority of One", "Send Me No Flowers", and she recently played "Mammy" in the musical "Li'l Abner".

Class Favorites . . .

The Junior Class chose as their Class Favorites Pat O'Hern and Randy Keltner.

Pat has shown her liveliness and interest in her class this year by being Junior Class secretary and devoting much of her time in preparation of the Jr-Sr Prom. She was selected as junior class cheerleader, has been a member of the Pep Club for three years, and has been elected to serve as a varsity cheerleader for the upcoming year.

Randy Keltner transferred to McGuinness this year from Harding. He immediately earned a position on the Varsity Football team and was selected to join the Letterman's Club. Randy was an active member of the Debate Team and has shown his skill by placing in many tournaments. As a finale to his first great year as a new student, his classmates elected him by an overwhelming majority to be Senior Class President for the Class of '69.

Pat O'Hern and Randy Keltner

Sophomore class Favorites during the year of 1968 were Melinda Sears and Mike Burke.

Melinda has been a member of the Honor Roll, an active member of the Pep Club, Class cheerleader during her past two years, and has been elected to be a Varsity cheerleader during her Junior year. Melinda's most outstanding contribution to her class was her selling of $150 worth of raffle tickets on the 442.

Mike Burke has also been a very devoted member of his class. He has participated in basketball during his freshman and sophomore years, played football during his sophomore years, and became a member of the Letterman's Club. Mike also sold quite a few tickets on the raffle for the Fun Festival, helping the Sophomores win a free trip to Roman Nose State Park.

Melinda Sears and Mike Burke

Mike Garvey and Shelley Roberts

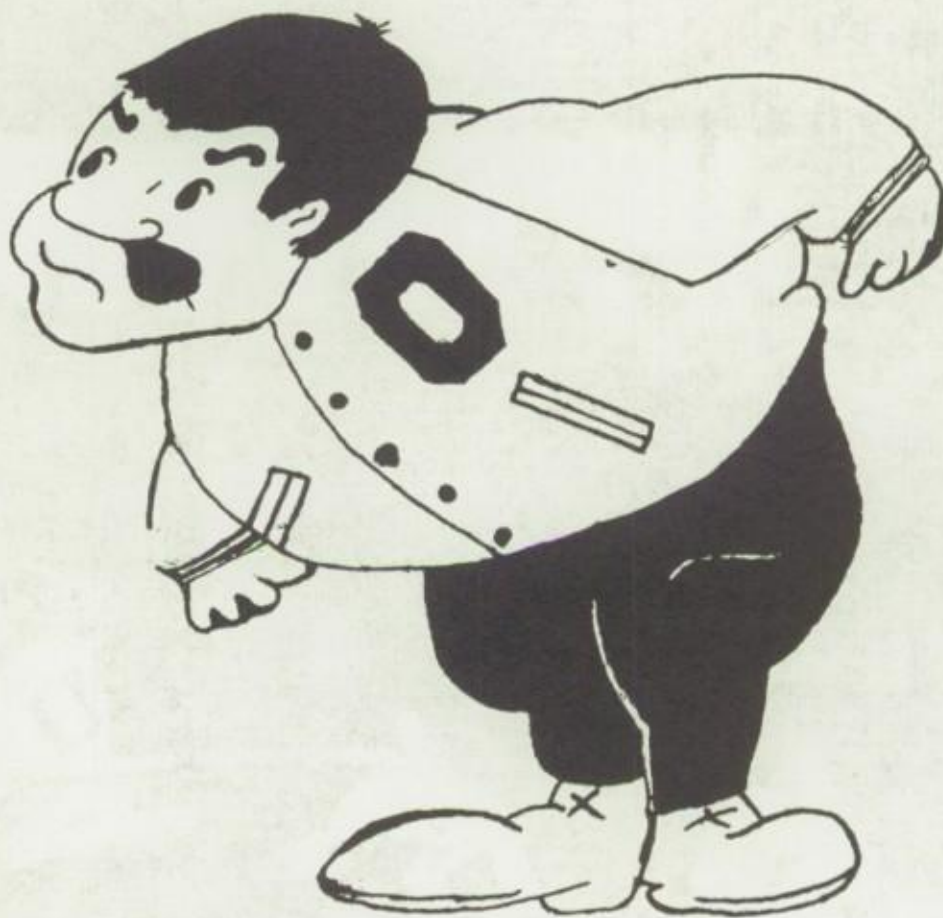

The Freshmen were eager and excited when they elected their Class Favorites, Mike Garvey and Shelley Roberts.

Mike Garvey is well-known at McGuinness and not only by the Freshman Class. His enthusiasm through participation in the Olympics and class projects has established him as an up and coming school personality and leader.

Shelley, on the otherhand, has shown her tremendous leadership ability. She was Treasurer of her Freshman Class, an energetic member of the Pep Club serving on numerous committees, and she has been elected by majority rule to serve as her Sophomore Class President.

Grid-Men Take Capital Conference.

It was a great year for coach Frank Hughes and his fighting Irish squad. The Capital Conference took in a new member only to find that no one in the organization could beat the newcomers. The Irish went 6-0 and marched off toteing their new trophy. An 8-0 record and a No. 1 state ranking was held by McGuinness until a fateful Friday night when, all of a sudden, the ground gave way. The Kelley Comets victored over the Irish. The greenmen then ended the season by running over Harding and posting a 9-1 record.

MHS'ers Bill Carey and Annabelle Heinen seem to be enjoying Visitation Day more than the visitors.

An outstanding group, comprised of six officers and forty representatives, doing an outstanding job of directing student government. Under the leadership of President Joe Sine, First Vice-President Barbara Sauer, Second Vice-President Marilyn Schultz, Secretary Barbara Huston, Treasurer Joan Bissonnette, and Parliamentarian Jack Love, our school has found the 1968 council a source of improvement, where student and faculty opinions are considered equally important. This is the aspect of our council which is foremost—that our school is a community and that the council is one of the main factors which keeps communications open within our school community.

Up against seemingly impossible odds, our council has faced them squarely, never retreating but always progressing in order to improve our school. They deserve our praise and our thanks.

Mrs. Stanley Lesneski, briefing Honor Society members on books for the blind.

Our group of the National Honor Society, the Cum Laude Chapter, from its first assembly began to exemplify the qualities for which they were selected Honor Society members.

The first of these qualities, and possibly the only one which distinguishes this group as being any different from the characteristic "IRISH" student, is its degree of scholarship. The Senior members, those Juniors received in the Spring induction, and the hopeful probationers, selected as sophomores, through their constant attainment of 3.3 or better have demonstrated an above average application to studies. This together with high qualities of character, commendable leadership and service to humanity, bring the privilege of wearing the blue stole and emblem of the National Honor Society at graduation and prepare the way to Phi Beta Kappa, the National Honor Society of College and Universities.

Activities of 1967-68, steered by the active and interested, president, Marie Bernard, centered in several vital areas. First there was an interest survey made of all members which resulted in long range planning for promotion of service in the group. This year, Sue McCabe, working with Mrs. Stanley Lesneski, co-ordinated the members in the utilization of their unassigned periods to prepare recordings for blind patients of the city who have many and urgent requests.

There are plans in the group for tutoring and providing student assistantships. A special activity is one to help assist needy and worthy students financially who wish to enter McGuinness.

It was the privilege of the 1967-68 group to pioneer as students of a modular scheduling system and thereby they anticipated in reality a college atmosphere. They also operated the McGuinness Bowl for the Olympics and always posted the school Honor Roll.

Fruitful memories are of the O.U. Medical Research Center, which the group toured, introducing Society members to the research facilities in the field of medicine, here in Oklahoma. A special memory will be that of the encouragement received from Ron Ercolani, a McGuinness graduate who spoke to the Honor Society on the realities of college life and gave various suggestions to assist in adjustments.

Cum Laude

Honor Society officers—Diane Dennehy, Secretary-Treasurer; Marie Bernard, President; Betty Semtner, Vice President—light the candle of leadership.

Those "behind-the-scenes" functions, such as lighting and staging the auditorium and setting up equipment needed by teachers in the classrooms, have for several years been performed by the Operator's Club. In the second semester of this school year, the traditional Operator's Club was converted into a club named Audio-Visual Aids, with the hope that more students would be able to participate in particular areas covered by the club.

A Year of Firsts

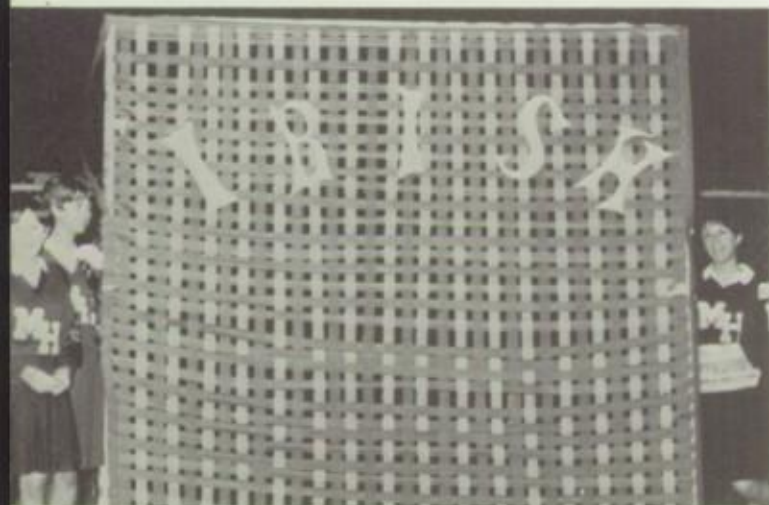

This year's officers of the Pep Club were: Annabelle Heinen, President; Susie Ward, Vice President; Peggy O'Hern, Secretary; and Vickie Venard, Treasurer. Under the leadership of these hard-working officers, the Pep Club underwent many new "firsts".

This was the first year the Pep Club broke the old tradition of a slow band for the Pep Club Dance, by providing the number one fast band in the state. Another new aspect was the adding of a new officer ... a Historian! Polly Kelly held this position and kept a record of all events the Irish performed.

Still another "first" was the taking over, cleaning out and managing the concession stand during all the games.

Adding to the spirit were this year's cheerleaders: Dianne Dunnett, Ann Ackerman, Patsy Alley, Seniors; Becky Ward, Terry Merritt, and Patty McGraw, juniors.

These accomplishments spelled out this year's Pep Club and officers as girls of determination and true "IRISH SPIRIT".

One of the biggest dances of the year was the Pep Club Thanksgiving Dance. "Some Enchanted Evening" was the theme of the semi-formal with the theme colors of olive green and gold corresponding to the dream-like atmosphere of the Grand Ballroom in Central State's new Student Union Building.

The music was supplied by Moby Dick and the Whalers, a nationally known fast band who held the number one position in the state.

This dance was termed a big success by the Sophomore, Junior, and Senior members of the Pep Club and their dates.

Always prepared for meetings, the High Notes had a successful year.

Time, effort, and ability are the three factors which make up this year's High Notes Club. Composed of twenty-five members, this year's High Notes spent most of their time ushering for symphonies and working on various money raising projects.

The officers were: Hannah Lu Draper, President; Anne Hollas, Vice-President; and Bette Hodur Secretary. The all city co-ordinating council, composed of eleven High Notes clubs in the city, had two of officers from McGuinness. These were Hannah Lu Draper, Vice-President and Ann Hollas Secretary. This was the first year the McGuinness High Notes had two officers in the council.

Tyro Players

No longer are young adults going to sit quietly and absorb text books and accept confinement in a 16 x 20 classroom. They want to know why, who they are, and what the world is about. The play is a form of expression that they understand and can use to speak out against depersonalization, segregation, and war. The TYRO Players have done just that. They also enjoy making people laugh and lighten their spirits for an evening. Dramatics is an art that makes you look at all kinds of people and at yourself. By the very conditions that they live in, the players come to know each other and live in harmony. Also, by going out to dozens of tourists each day they meet many kinds of people and learn to relate personally to them.

Lettermen Revise Rules

Before a boy can be able to wear his letter jacket, he must become a member of the Letterman's Club. This is the sole club which boys participating in sports can join.

What does it mean to become a letterman? And what qualifications does it involve?

This year's officers, Clifford Peden, President; Bill Smith, Vice-President; and Darrell Palmer, Secretary-Treasurer decided to alter the rules a bit in agreement with other Capital Conference schools. Future lettermen have to have lettered in a Varsity sport and must go through an embarrassing week of initiation procedures. It all turns out to be a fun week which everyone looks forward to.

This year's club sponsored speakers for the school, sold traditional "Letterman's Club Shirts", and made preparations for a Letterman's Club Dance.

THE IRISH MYTH

In the beginning there was nothing save a barren spot of firmament at 50th and Francis—spiritless, without people, without bone.

A daring Irish Idea, freshened by a Green Angles' breath, winged to the scene. Idea mused: "Is this spot my Eden to be? On this plot shall I prove that the Heart of the Irish is its People?"

The Big Man, to whom Idea was wed, leaped joyously. "Creation all over again," he shouted, "We can do it. We can prove it."

"Keep your cool," warned Idea, "The children of our union are faith, people, and hard work."

Into the earthen plot were plunged the Irish hands of many people. There were the sweating tears of labor and the pull of temptation to forsake it all. From a grave of nothingness rose a mansion of sorts. And the team of Big Man and Idea filled its halls with little Irish Ideas.

There was Faith Idea who visioned a future. There was Hope Idea who dangled rewards. There was Charity Idea who gave freely of life and possessions. And, like all tykes, some fought, and they called them "Fighting Irish Ideas."

And this leads us to the master of them all: the General Idea. As you follow our senior section, look for the children of Big Man and Idea. They are all around you. Every bit of stone and timber they fashioned. Every grad of these halls they marked with promise for tomorrow. And every human spirit, reborn and reclaimed, they relighted. Each of our lives is their creation, moulded by Big Man and Idea at McGuinness High School.

They are people like you and me and they prove that the Heart of the Irish is its People.

Juniors

The heart of the Irish is in its upperclassmen, for it is these men and women who realize the true meaning of the Irish myth. At McGuinness, Juniors begin to accept the responsibilities connected with the Irish ring. Sauntering nonchalantly with an air of confidence, the Juniors move on toward the fulfillment of the Irish ideals.

At lunch, or just helping out in the library Juniors possess the quality of undying spirit.

Sophomores proved their willingness to work and their initiative by selling more tickets than any class for the Irish Fun Festival. They were rewarded for their efforts with a class trip to Roman Nose Park. The fun they had should remind them that the sophomore class spirit of '68 will carry them on to greater things in the years ahead. The sophomores contributed athletes to all sports and the varsity teams were given encouragement and assistance by these enthusiastic newcomers. These underclassmen also took an active part in the McGuinness Olympics with entries in every area and continued the annual Sophomore French Fry Sale which has become a traditional fund raising project for this spirited class. This group has proven their dedication to the activities and responsibility a McGuinness student should have.

Jerry Green leads the sophomores in Student Council with questions and suggestions.
